

1954

Montana

HIGHWAY MAP

THE JUDITH BASIN COUNTRY

The first white men to explore this district was Hugh Monroe, called "Rising Wolf" by the Blackfeet Indians. The Judith Basin was favorite hunting and fishing ground of these Indians.

In the early '80's cattlemen and prospectors moved in. Ranches were opened in the Judith Mountains and range stock replaced the roaming buffalo. This country is rich in frontier history and many of the pioneer

The Judith Basin country was the early day stamping ground of Charley M. Russell, famous and beloved Montana cowboy artist. Charley is now camping somewhere across the Great Divide where the grass is green and there aren't any fences.

PUBLISHED BY THE

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION

FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION

